

Jane Fonda

United States |

Actress/Activist

An Academy Award winning actress and international stage and screen star known for such films as "The China Syndrome" and "Coming Home," Fonda now focuses much of her time on activism and social change with much of her work devoted to environmental issues, human rights, and the empowerment of women and girls. She is a member of the Women & Foreign Policy Advisory Committee of the Council on Foreign Relations and in 1994 was named Goodwill Ambassador for the United Nations Population Fund.

"As a person who has written, protested and acted against wars and violence of all kinds for a great deal of my life, I add my endorsement to the growing list of those who recognize the need to end wars and occupations, and to end all forms of violence against people no matter what their age, gender, sexual preference or religion, and the further need to learn to help and heal rather than hurt our fellow human beings and this planet we live upon."